5 Tips To Consider Before Setting up Camps

If you have already planned to leave the comfort of your house and explore the nature and spend few days and nights outdoor then consider spending few minutes reading this article before heading out in the wilds. Take out some time to plan what you will need.

here are 5 things to consider before setting up camps:

- ### 1 Find the ideal campsite

Make sure the place you choose is flat as possible. Also, make sure there is good drainage out from the campsite. It is better to have a slight slope to the left or right of the campsite. It is also better to have the tent pitched on a slope of falling ground rather than rising ground.

Setting up the tent

Once you have selected the ideal location and cleared it of all debris, you should start to set up the tent. Make sure you lay a waterproof cloth down on the ground before filling the poles together and assembling the tent.
- ### 2 Fire and cooking area

Fire is probably the most useful discovery you will find and it is of course one of the most important tools you have. Do not allow open fires. It is always a good idea to have a fire pit built and to use it for cooking and for heating.
