The Birth of an Elite Force

In the depths of the Rocky Mountains, the creation of the 10th Mountain Division began as a bold experiment. Recognizing the strategic value of mountain warfare, the U.S. Army assembled a team of experienced skiers, mountaineers, and outdoorsmen. With specialized training in skiing, mountaineering, and winter combat tactics, these men honed their skills amidst the unforgiving wilderness.

Into the Heart of Darkness: The Italian Campaign

As the war raged in Europe, the 10th Mountain Division found themselves thrust into the treacherous Apennine Mountains of Italy. Facing formidable German defenses entrenched in icy heights, the ski troops adapted with remarkable agility, employing innovative tactics and their unmatched mountain warfare skills. They scaled sheer cliffs, navigated treacherous ravines, and outmaneuvered the enemy at every turn.

The Liberation of Kiska: Proving Ground in the Arctic

Beyond the European theater, the 10th Mountain Division faced a daunting mission in the desolate Aleutian Islands of Alaska. Tasked with liberating the fog-bound island of Kiska, the ski troops endured punishing conditions, frigid temperatures, and fierce Japanese resistance. Their amphibious assault and audacious climbing techniques paved the way for the island's eventual recapture, showcasing their versatility and tenacity.

The Peak of Valor: Riva Ridge and Beyond

The Battle of Riva Ridge stands as a testament to the indomitable spirit of the 10th Mountain Division. Against overwhelming odds, they seized a fortified German stronghold perched atop a seemingly impregnable mountain. Their unwavering determination and audacious tactics defied all expectations, earning them the prestigious Presidential Unit Citation.
